

Organized Single Specialties set to capture 30% of India's Single Specialty hospitals market, crossing USD 9 billion by FY28: Aventus Capital

Mumbai, June 10, 2025

Aventus Capital, India's largest investment bank, unveiled a report capturing how single specialty healthcare is breaking away from the multi-specialty setup to chart its own path in India. According to the report, organized single specialty chains are scaling rapidly. With a current market size of USD 4 billion and 27% share within the single specialty segment, these chains are expected to grow at 24% CAGR to USD 9 billion by 2028. Their growth is underpinned by strong fundamentals - EBITDA margins exceeding 20%, ROCEs above 30%, and early breakeven within two years.

Since 2015, the segment has attracted cumulative private equity investments exceeding USD 3.7 billion, accounting for over 35% of total hospital investments. 70% of these investments have gone to established specialties such as IVF, eyecare, mother & child care, dialysis and oncology. However, in the last 2- 3 years, leading players in specialties such as dental care, urology / nephrology, skin and hair care have also started to attract investor interest due to significant whitespaces in the demand-supply in these specialties. These formats offer an ideal blend of low capital intensity, high specificity of care, and replicable business models that are increasingly appealing to institutional investors and founders alike.

Market leaders in most of these specialties are tapping into available capital to accelerate growth via M&A roll-ups, indicating strong investor belief in platform plays and consolidation potential. As per the report, with established players expected to increasingly target public markets, the market cap of listed single specialty chains could rise from the current USD 3.9 billion to USD 18 billion by FY30, driven by new listings as well as growth in listed players.

Anshul Gupta, Managing Director and Head, Healthcare Investment Banking, Aventus Capital said, "India's single specialty healthcare space is witnessing a structural shift, driven by superior unit economics and rising investor confidence. What makes this segment compelling is its ability to improve patient experience, scale efficiently, and deliver strong investor returns. Financial sponsors are backing these focused formats aggressively, given their replicable models and M&A roll-up potential. While current penetration is centered around metros and Tier 1 cities, the next wave of growth could come from Tier 2+ markets, where significant white-spaces exist, given the retail-like box economics model. We also foresee heightened public market activity, with scaled platforms increasingly tapping into capital markets, mirroring the multi-specialty wave of the past decade. That said, as in any retail-like model, immaculate execution capabilities will be the pre-requisite for success. Then again, the strong macro tailwinds are undeniable. Such models have succeeded in many developed economies, it is just a matter of time, and we feel India's time is not too far away."

The report underlines the key drivers that led to the breaking away of eight single specialties as independent business models and their respective growth trajectories. It studies the factors that make certain specialties more suitable for the single specialty model and lays down the total addressable market for each. It also uses a proprietary model for demand estimation based on a bottom-up approach of underlying demand drivers, informed by first-hand deal execution experiences across certain specialties, validated by interviewing industry practitioners and experts.

The rise of single specialty hospitals marks a shift in how care is delivered - leaner models focused on one clinical area, built to scale efficiently, and designed around patient convenience. Unlike multi-specialty hospitals, which function as 'destinations', single specialty formats are often 'retail-like' in nature - offering proximity, specialization, and quick turnaround for patients with specific needs. With market leaders actively exploring IPOs and consolidation underway, India's single specialty landscape is entering a new phase of growth.
